

16. 1905 ENDS; 1906 PORTENDS

---

While high hopes continued, the siting of the State Farm and School at Davisville was by no means certain on the last day of 1905.

There was no decision.

COMING IN 1906:

- Does Wickson report?
- Does Wheeler compromise?
- Does the Commission eventually decide?

STAY TUNED FOR THE OUTCOMES IN 1906!

CONTRIBUTORS AND ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This exhibit would not be possible without the historical research of others and the availability of the historical documents we reproduce here.

- The Special Collections Department of the UC Davis Shields Library is the custodian of many of the original documents. Department Head Daryl Morrison and University Archivist John Skarstad have been extraordinarily generous and helpful in providing guidance and digital copies.
- The texture of the story is deepened by Joann Leach Larkey's "Portraits of the Past" columns from the Davis Enterprise, 1969-1972. Larkey also contributed through her Davis Centennial book, Davisville '68.
- Ann Scheuring's portrayals of signal UC personalities, reproduced from her book Abundant Harvest, likewise broaden our understanding.
- Additional information comes from John Lofland's book Davis: Radical Changes, Deep Constants.
- We thank the Hattie Weber Museum, Phyllis Haig, Curator, for several photographs from its archives.
- Perhaps most importantly, Judge, Editor, and Booster William Henry Scott, the central figure of the Davisville Enterprise, created an almost microscopic week-by-week record in his paper. Without it, our perception of 1905 would be dim, indeed.
- And, of course, the written participant perspectives provided by Peter Shields and George W. Pierce Jr. have been invaluable.
